While cleaning out the shelves by the chemical cabinet, I ran across these two piles of 'stuff'.

On the left, we have a pair of battery operated 'screw gun' type drills. This pile has one storage case, and 5 batteries. No battery chargers.

On the right, we have a box of electronics and cable. It seems to be a box full of a security camera system, a digital recorder, and several security cameras and the cabling to use it. (along with a Raspberry Pi)

We are uncertain if these piles were intended as 'tooling' (aka, drills go to the tools area, security system gets used at EMS, in which case, there's certain places they should go), or perhaps they were intended as a donation to Pick-a-part (as in, anyone can rip them apart and take bits and pieces for their own projects, in which case, they go in pick-a-part).. or perhaps these are just out-of-place personal items that fits neither definition? (In which case they need tagging)

If you know anything about these items, please speak up. I've left them on the conference tables overnight, but I expect to be back to the shop sometime tomorrow. I'd like to move them towards their 'proper' staging areas.

Karen
